Jet noise getting to you? S.D. airport gets $25.9 million to help nearby residents
Hundred of people living in neighborhoods near San Diego International Airport will be the beneficiary each year of nearly $26 million in newly awarded federal funds designed to soften the impact of noise from planes’ takeoffs and landings.

In all, some 400 to 500 homes will benefit from the grant money, which will go toward the airport’s residential sound insulation initiative, known as the Quieter Home Program. Nearby communities where some residences are eligible for extra soundproofing include Point Loma, Ocean Beach, South Park, Golden Hill and Bankers Hill.

The funds, which were awarded as part of two separate grants to the San Diego County Regional Airport Authority by the Federal Aviation Administration, mark the largest annual allocation for San Diego. The $25.9 million also represents one of the biggest sums ever given to any airport across the country, San Diego officials said. The year before, San Diego’s grant money totaled $18 million, which far exceeded the awards in previous years.

The FAA has set a goal of reducing interior noise levels for eligible residents by at least five decibels inside the home.

Qualifying homes can receive retrofitted exterior doors and windows, installation of a ventilation system or other items, such as weather stripping and caulking around openings.

Since its inception, Quieter Home has been responsible for retrofitting more than 4,500 single-family and multifamily residences immediately east and west of the airport.

Anti-mask group sues San Diego Unified over vaccination mandate in schools
San Diego Unified school district has been fighting California’s school mask mandate sued the San Diego Unified School District on Oct. 11 over the district’s new COVID-19 vaccination mandate.

Let Them Choose, a project of the anti-mask group Parents Rights, filed the lawsuit, which contends the district’s vaccination mandate hurts students because it forces them to learn from home in independent study if they don’t get vaccinated.

On Sept. 28, the San Diego Unified board unanimously approved a requirement that all students 16 and older, as well as staff, be fully vaccinated against COVID by Dec. 20.

Younger students will be required to get vaccinated after a vaccine is fully approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for their age groups, according to the mandate.

In early October, the state also mandated that students receive COVID vaccines once they’re fully approved, but with a longer timeline. Students 12 and older will have to get vaccinated starting with the semester that begins after a vaccine is fully approved by the FDA for youths ages 12-15. The earliest that requirement could kick in is Jan. 1.

The Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine currently is fully approved for people 16 and older. It has emergency authorization from the FDA for ages 12-15.

San Diego Unified has said its vaccine mandate will help reduce the spread of COVID among students, their families and school staff and will reduce disruptions to student learning.

Let Them Choose argues that San Diego Unified, as an individual school district, lacks the legal authority to mandate a vaccine and that only the state’s public health department and Legislature can do that. — The San Diego Union-Tribune

Proposal to repeal S.D.’s free trash pickup for single-family homes gets support
Environmental groups and labor unions expressed strong support Oct. 7 for repealing San Diego’s law guaranteeing free trash pickup to single-family homes, calling it outdated, unfair, too costly and a barrier to boosting recycling rates.

The groups lobbied for a ballot measure to repeal the law, called the People’s Ordinance,
